The 107th Weather Flight, Selfridge Air National Guard Base, Michigan, participates in a rigorous fitness test on Sep. 20, at Hartland High School, consisting of a three mile run, four minutes of situps, two minutes of pushups, pull-ups and a 1,500 meter swim. The 107th Weather Flight is a highly trained, highly deployed special tactics unit trained to provide mission critical forecast in a forward deployed location to U.S. forces involved in combat operations. The 107th Weather Flight is part of the Air Force Special Operations Command and works with U.S. and foreign allied special operations units.

Commander's Column

By Lt. Col. Gregory S. Holzhei
127th Maintenance Group Commander

I recently returned from a weekend spent in Nashville, Tennessee, at the National Guard Association of the United States (NGAUS) annual conference. What a great conference; probably the best annual conference I have attended since I started going to the annual conferences back in 1999.

This year's conference was held at the Gaylord Opryland Hotel and Conference Center. This particular hotel is almost connected to the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville, Tennessee. My wife and I drove down on Thursday and returned to Michigan on Monday. It was a weekend filled with social events, professional and personal gatherings, some association business meetings, and some very distinguished speakers.

Typically, the agenda calls for business meetings and separate Air and Army committee sessions during the day and social events at night. In addition, there are literally hundreds of businesses arranged in a booth-type setup for the conference attendees to visit with and see the latest and greatest military support equipment and services the civilian market has to offer.

Each of the 54 states and territories send what is called a "delegation" to this national conference. The delegation from Michigan is usually comprised of folks from the Michigan Army and Air National Guard that are members of the National Guard Association of Michigan (NGAM). This year there were about 50 delegates from Michigan, some of whom brought family members, including spouses and kids. Since this is a professional organization, attending this conference and the annual NGAM conference is on your own dime. This year I kept the cost down because I didn't have to buy airplane tickets. We treated the conference like a weekend getaway, and it turned out to be just that.

The whole affair was capped off by an invitation-only Grand Ole Opry performance for just our conference attendees. Wynnona and Trace Adkins (among others) made appearances and sang a few songs for our group. As we drove home Monday morning we could not have been more pleased with our experience at the conference. We talked continuously during our long nine hour drive home about how good next year's conference will likely be, given that it is in Austin, Texas, and Texas does everything BIG!

My point in relaying this good experience to you is to try and continue the conversation a lot of us have been having concerning professional organizations. I'm perplexed by the reluctance to join professional organizations that are related to our military service. I'm trying to figure out what it is that turns people off to supporting organizations that, in turn, support them. It could be, that in our current environment, guardsmen feel less affiliation with these groups because they don't see instant positive results from having joined an organization. I could identify with that logic.

I am a life member of a group named the "Daedalians." It is an organization of heavier-than-air military pilots. The organization is based out of San Antonio, Texas. There are no local chapters for me to join and go to a monthly meeting, unless I want to go to Wright Paterson AFB, Ohio.

...From the Chief's Desk

By Chief Master Sgt. Gregory J. Robinson
127th Civil Engineering Squadron Superintendent

The year has been short, fast and furious again here at Selfridge. As I write this article fall is right around the corner. I have had the privilege of being on orders these past few months working on civil engineering projects like a new photo lab in building 303 and renovations for new offices in building 129 have been a great experience.

Fall is a great time of the year and everyone knows what comes along with fall, the "Airmen of the Year nominations". Squadrons are busy holding boards making their selections, tirelessly gathering data, making sure each package is just right and getting in before the Command Chief's deadline.

I would like to give just a little history on the Airmen of the Year program. It was initiated more than 50 years ago by, the Air Force Association (AFA). This award recognizes 12 outstanding enlisted personnel for superior leadership, job performance, community involvement, and personal achievements. AFA honors the 12 Outstanding Airmen at its annual convention in Washington, D.C.

The program was initiated at the Air Force Association's 10th annual national conference, held in New Orleans, LA, in 1956. The Chief Master Sergeant of the Air Force, a general officer and selected Major Command, Command Chiefs form the selection board. The Air Force Chief of Staff reviews the selections. The 12 Outstanding Airmen are awarded the Outstanding Airman ribbon with the bronze service star device and wear the Outstanding Airman badge for one year. They also serve on the Air Force Enlisted Council for one year.

The Outstanding Airman of the Year Ribbon is a decoration of the United States Air Force, which was created on February 21, 1968 by former Secretary of the Air Force, Harold Brown.

The first presentation of the award was in June of 1970. The Outstanding Airman of the Year Ribbon is the highest personal ribbon decoration of the United States Air Force.

As you see the Outstanding Airman of the Year is a real privilege and recognizes the contributions of the truly outstanding Airmen. I know what you are thinking, there is no way that I can make it to the Air Force Association in Washington D.C. being

National Guard doing what it was designed to do

By Army Staff Sgt. Jim Greenhill

National Guard Bureau

For eight years, the National Guard has been doing exactly what it was built for, the chief of the National Guard Bureau said Sept. 23.

The question is, what will it do next? Defense leaders are discussing the Guard's future roles and missions, Air Force Gen. Craig McKinley said during a visit to the National Defense University here at Fort Leslie J. McNair.

"We've been at war now longer than at any time in our nation's history," McKinley said. "We've done it in an all-volunteer capacity. The reason we can do [that] is the magnificent men and women who are in our active components augmented, complimented and integrated with our reserve component forces, to include the National Guard. ... We are a shock absorber or rheostat that allows the active component force to stay steadily engaged."

Discussion about the Guard's future role is prompted by the Defense Department's 2010 Quadrennial Defense Review.

The legislatively-mandated QDR, which occurs every four years, assesses the threats and challenges the nation faces and rebalances the Defense Department's strategies, capabilities and forces to address today's conflicts and tomorrow's threats.

McKinley raised rhetorical questions for an audience comprised of American and allied officers, who will grapple with the very same issues:

* What is an appropriate balance between the size of the active duty force and the size of a reserve component?

* What does an operational reserve mean, and does it mean that there is no longer a need for a strategic reserve?

* When both National Guard and federal forces respond to a major domestic disaster, who is in charge, and what does the command and control structure look like?

* What kind of force structure can the nation afford?

* Where does the National Guard fit in the National Security Strategy?

"I grew up with a National Guard that was built around training with equipment that wasn't necessarily first line ... and it was designed around a force that was predominantly civilian in nature - 75 percent to 80 percent of our force were civilians who for a very brief period during a month would come to training," McKinley said.

But after the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, and Hurricane Katrina in 2005, today's National Guard isn't your father's National Guard.

"We have become an operational National Guard," McKinley said.

About 360,000 Guardmembers have mobilized once, many more than once. Hundreds of Guard Soldiers and Airmen have paid the ultimate price.

"The people that we have made part of our formation and part of our wing structure are young people who ... want to deploy," McKinley said. "They want to mobilize. They're not looking for an out. ... The people who join us today want to be part of this military, they want to be integrated, they want to share - they want to be part of the team approach.

"If we as a nation choose to go back to a time where [the National Guard is] really strategic, a lot of young people that we've recruited over the last 15 years would probably vote with their feet and leave. ... They're very proud of their federal responsibilities. They really want to be well-trained and well-equipped to do things on behalf of the citizens of their states."

So, what will we do next? "You can't answer the question," McKinley told the students. "Because this Quadrennial Defense Review that we are going through, will help us shape what that force is."

Joint operations leads to successful radio test

By Capt. Penny Carroll

127th Public Affairs

An improved radio communication system to enable increased range for use on an Unmanned Ground Vehicle was tested last week at Selfridge Air National Guard Base, Michigan. Under a unique agreement and display of military partnership between entities at Detroit Arsenal and the base's host unit, the 127th Wing, the Robotics Systems Joint Project Office (RS JPO) and TARDEC were able to coordinate a Government test to verify the extended range capability of the radio.

The IbisTek wireless data link radio is being considered by the government to provide soldiers with a greater standoff distance and allow for a broader range of programmable frequencies. "Radio range has become an issue for Soldiers and Marines in the field. IbisTek claimed their product has longer transmission capabilities, and we needed a large unobstructed area in which to test these claims," explained Major Kevin Schrock, the assistant product manager for Robotic Maneuver Systems.

During the recent test, Air National Guardsmen cleared the way for the Army to test on Selfridge's flight line. By collaborating on the test location, the Army saved thousands of taxpayer dollars that would have been spent in shipping and testing the equipment in a suitable location.

TSgt. Kathy Fuller, 127th Wing airfield management craftsman, was instrumental in coordinating the multiple ANG offices needed to ensure the success of the joint project. "I was contacted by our Civil Engineer squadron that there was an interest in the use of a 3 kilometer stretch of land west of Bravo Taxiway. I coordinated the details of the testing with RS JPO, then relayed the scenario to ATC (Control Tower) and Airfield Management to make sure all agencies were aware of the operation."

Sgt. Fuller also coordinated with Security Forces and the control tower to ensure proper flight line clearance for the outside agencies. "I made sure that they had a qualified airfield driver who knew how to stay in touch with ATC in reference to being in a controlled area." Selfridge timed the test around regular flight schedules so that their missions were not affected, and controlled movement and personnel on the flight line.

For the test, the IbisTek radio was mounted to a Gladiator robot which was on loan from the TARDEC Intelligent Ground Personnel involved with the testing of the IbisTek wireless data link radio at Selfridge Air National Guard Base, Mich., last week gather around the Gladiator robot. The unique joint nature of the base in the northern suburbs of the metro-Detroit area brought together many parts of the Army and the Air Force to create a cost-saving test environment for the radio which promised increased range for use on an Unmanned Ground Vehicle. In this photo (left to right, starting back row), Mr. Greg Hudson, robot technician; RS JPO Mr. Randall Ponder, engineering technician, RS JPO; the Gladiator Robot; Major Kevin Schrock, assistant product manager, maneuver systems; Mr. Samuel Pirrone, radio frequency engineer; (front row) Mr. Robert Rappold, engineering team lead, Small Unmanned Ground Vehicles; Ms. Valerie Bolhouse, systems engineer; and Ms. Shanna Render, TARDEC Gladiator project manager.

Systems office. This robot is used to research, develop and test the capabilities of tele-operated ground vehicles. As the robot was maneuvered down the flight line, the radio's transmission range was documented.

"Having the flight line available to the team allowed both organizations to quickly assess the capability of the radio," stated Rob Rappold, the Systems Engineer for Robotic Maneuver Systems.

Shanna Render, the TARDEC Gladiator Project Engineer, agreed stating "I hope this level of cooperation continues in the future."

Flu Season Again

Vacinations for seasonal and the H1N1flu virus will begin being distributed to both Army and Air Guardsmen in November, as confirmed by the NGB. The date to receive the shots is determined by the Department of Defense and each state's plans through the public health system.

The Center for Disease Control plays a influential role on deciding when the shots are issued to Army and Air National Guardsmen and what order the shots are received based on military status and career field.

Symptoms for the H1N1 are similar to the seasonal flu. If additional symptoms such as: difficulty breathing, bluish skin, chest pain or pressure, sudden dizziness, confusion or severe vomiting occur contact your physician or an emergency medical center immediately.

Air Force Gen. Craig R. McKinley, chief, National Guard Bureau, receives his seasonal flu shot from Tech Sgt. Angela Archer at The Pentagon, Friday, Sept. 25, 2009. "Protect yourself, your family, & your coworkers and get yours soon," he said, after receiving it.

The IG Corner

By Lt. Col. Kristine N. Holmes

127th Inspector General

Since I've assumed the role of Wing Inspector General (IG), I have wondered how I can explain my role to you, the wing member, without you having the urge to run away when you see me. Therefore, I've decided to publish my first article in hopes of providing you with information of what it is that I do as your Wing IG.

First, I'd like to give you a little quiz.

1. True or False, my role is to inspect your squadron/organization and "write you up."
2. True or False, the IG handles issues involving race, color, sex, religion, or national origin.
3. True or False, the IG handles issues involving Court-Martial Actions Non-judicial punishment, Article 15, UCMJ actions, legal advice, and claims.
4. True or False, the IG handles issues involving Line of Duty Determinations, Active Duty Medical Evaluation (ADME), and Incapacitation pay.

Let's find out how well you performed on the quiz above. The answer to question 1 is false. My role is not to inspect your squadron or agency and "write you up." I don't wear the "black hat" and do not wish an adversarial role with anyone. The answer to question 2 is false. Issues involving race, color, sex, religion, or national origin are handled by the Military Equal Opportunity (MEO) office. The answer to question 3 is false. The legal office can assist you with issues involving Court-Martial Actions Non-judicial punishment, Article 15, UCMJ actions, legal advice and claims. Lastly, the answer to question 4 is also false. Issues involving Line of Duty, Active Duty Medical Evaluation (ADME), and incapacitation pay are handled by the Medical Group.

I'm guessing a few of you are asking, "Then what does the IG do?" Before I answer you, I wanted you to know that in 1777, upon General George Washington's recommendation, Congress appointed the first United States Inspector General. As you can imagine, over the last 232 years the duties of the IG certainly have changed, however the goal has remained the same. That goal is to ensure our military is focused on the mission and is an effective fighting force. In order for you to remain focused on the mission, the IG focuses on the following matters:

Allegations of injustice

recognized as one of the Outstanding Airmen. There is no doubt in my mind we have Airmen right here at Selfridge that have achieved superior leadership, outstanding job performance, are very involved in their communities and made great strides in their personal achievements.

We, as leaders, need to take pride and the time to write down the accomplishments of our Airmen, NCOs and our Senior NCOs making sure these folks are recognized to the fullest extent of the contributions to the Air National Guard and the United States Air Force.

To have one of our own outstanding Airmen recognized as the most outstanding Airman in the entire Air National Guard

Perceived violations of law/directives
Mismanagement of resources and waste of funds (Fraud, Waste and Abuse)

Abuse of authority

Danger to public health/safety

Unable to get a situation resolved quickly

My primary job is to be the "eyes, ears and conscience of the command" and to act as an ombudsman for the base populace, whether military, civilian, dependant or retiree. The dictionary defines "ombudsman" as "a government official charged with investigating citizens' complaints against the government and assisting in achieving fair settlements." This is a perfect description for what this office does. Additionally, I have ready access to all levels of the IG complaint system meaning, I can elevate the problem to major command-level, Air Force-level, or Department of Defense-level if the situation dictates.

I'd like to point out that I'm not here to circumvent your leadership. I encourage you, as your first course of action, to use your chain of command to resolve issues. In most cases, the leadership in your organizations wants to assist you and has the expertise and tools necessary to resolve your problem most expeditiously. However, if you feel your complaint has not received the attention you think it deserves within the chain, or if the problem lies within the chain, that's where I can help you resolve your complaints or to find solutions to issues you may have with the military system. I do want to caution you that you may not get the answer you seek by bringing me your complaint. However, I do promise you that your complaint will get a thorough, unbiased look.

I'll finish by saying; the IG system has a great track record. Approximately 80 percent of individuals who seek IG assistance, receive help in some way. My goal is to continue that great track record and assist you with problem resolution so that you can focus on the mission. For it is when we are working together and sharing a common goal that our Air Force is unbeatable! For more information, check out my COP on the AF Portal.

would be a tribute to all the enlisted men and women of the Michigan Air National Guard. It would also be a tribute to the outstanding leadership here at the 127th Wing who fosters an environment that reflects the Air Force core values.

I personally want to salute all of the nominees and the soon-to-be winners on your achievements. I thank all of our leadership for being the kind of people who will help model our Airmen for the future.

Selfridge Family Readiness

By Technical Sgt. Dan Heaton

127th Public Affairs

Two months into the Year of the Air Force Family, there is packing tape on the floor on a Sunday afternoon in the 127th Wing's Family Support Center. Deb Schroeder, who heads the office, is re-packing Teddy bears into boxes for distribution to children of wing members. The Family Readiness office is a busy place these days, Schroeder said.

"We're seeing an increase in activity because of the way the local economy is impacting our wing members," she said. "We are also doing more and more follow-up with our members who have deployed, making sure that they get the assistance they might need."

In July, Secretary of the Air Force Michael B. Donley and Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Norton Schwartz designated July 2009-July 2010 as the "Year of the Air Force Family." In a July 17 memorandum, the leaders explained that the Air Force family is dynamic and diverse, made up of active duty, Reserve and Guard component members; officer and enlisted, civilians, spouses and children and that it also extends to parents, friends and community partners who support Airmen.

"Airmen want a sense of community, and sound Air Force policy can help foster it. But it is leadership at the local level that probably does more to fulfill that need ... we shouldn't underestimate the impact of simply reaching out to our Fellow Airmen," Secretary Donley said in an Aug. 19 speech to a national convention of the Air Force Sergeants Association.

At Selfridge, the commitment to Air Force families can be found in events such as the Family Fun Fest, planned for Sunday,

When I was stationed in Little Rock, Arkansas, I went to the monthly local chapter meetings at Little Rock AFB. Since I left Little Rock in 1999, I have gotten literally nothing out of my affiliation with this group, other than the satisfaction of knowing that I belong to a fraternity of military pilots. It would have been easy and saved me a lot of money to drop my membership after I left Little Rock, but for some reason I have remained a member, even if my membership is somewhat dormant. As I look back at what has caused me to remain a member, I would have to say the driving factor was that the Daedalians support military aviation in a variety of ways, and I support that effort. Like so many of the professional organizations I support, I will never get instant gratification in terms of money or recognition, but over time, the good that they do and the satisfaction of being a member is enough.

Somehow we have to push back on this "what have they done for me lately" attitude. I'll admit that I had that attitude for a number of years concerning a certain Michigan-based professional organization. Then it dawned on me, I can't keep relying on the "old guys" to provide the leadership and fun at our association meetings and gatherings. Sooner or later I and my peers have to take responsibility for the organization and how it is run.

There are a couple of organizations that are based in Washington, just a stones-throw from the capitol building, that do more for the Guard than anyone can imagine. It's because of the lobbying power, in part, of these professional organizations, that

Oct. 4, during the October Unit Training Assembly. At the Fun Fest, children of wing members ages 4-12 are invited to be dropped off at the Family Support Center office, located in the base chapel facility, for a day of fun activities. Among the highlights, will be an opportunity for the children to visit many of the work centers around the base and Trick-or-Treat during their visit.

"We tried this for the first time last year and it was a big success," Schroeder said. "This year, we are encouraging work centers to let us know if we can visit them, what time and how we should enter the building with the children."

Children may be dropped off as early as 6 a.m. for the Fun Fest and picked up at the end of the duty day. For information, contact the Family Readiness office at 586-239-5583. Children are welcome to bring Halloween costumes to the event.

In addition to the Family Fun Fest, several programs are ramping up as the calendar begins to move to the holiday season at the end of the year. Schroeder said application forms are available for wing families who need assistance in providing Christmas gifts to children through an "Adopt-A-Family" program. The Family Support Center is also working on a "Wheels of Hope" program that can provide assistance to an Airman who is dealing with a broken down vehicle and may need assistance.

While several of the events coming up are geared toward the children of wing members, the Year of the Air Force Family is not neglecting the well-being of single members, according to the statement from the Secretary. Donley said the Air Force is committing to ensuring quality Morale, Welfare & Recreation programs, dormitories and other items of concern to both single and married Airmen are maintained.

we in the Guard are not pushed back into a Homeland Defense only role. If some in Congress had their way, the National Guard would not be a relevant force and we would be doing US border patrol only. Here at Selfridge, that would mean big changes. I can't see that A-10s and KC-135s would be needed to do our state mission only!

These organizations exist for you. These organizations are you and me. When we give up on these organizations, we have given up on caring for ourselves collectively. If the most you can do is give financially to support these on-going efforts, then pay your dues and be grateful that someone else is actually putting time and effort into the administration and work that goes into running an organization on your behalf. Every organization has a Website. If you don't know what your dues go to, then you have no one to blame but yourself for your lack of awareness.

Hopefully, sooner or later, more of you will come to the realization, as I had to that we are the new caretakers of these professional organizations. Hopefully, sooner or later, more of you will decide that these professional organizations are not only worth saving, but worthy of your full support.

I look forward to the day when professional organization support is not something we have to talk and write about. I hope someday we don't have to perform our annual sales-pitch to get support for some of these professional organizations. Lastly, I encourage you to be part of the solution in making professional organization support part of the culture right here at Selfridge once again.

Wounded Warrior Program

Air Force officials have developed the wounded warrior program to assist Airmen in need because wounded warriors and families remain a top priority.

The recovery care coordinator is designed to be an ultimate resource for seriously wounded, ill, or injured service members.

RCCs work closely with family liaison officers, patient liaison officers, medical case managers, and a host of support agencies to ensure the right level of support and entitlements are delivered to recovering Airmen and eligible family members.

RCCs are currently assigned to the National Capital Region and San Antonio. The program is slated to expand to 15 additional RCC positions. For further assistance or information regarding the RCC program, active-duty, Reserve or Guard members should call the 24-hour assistance line 877-USAF-HELP.

Childrens Fall Fest

The 127th Wing Readiness Center is sponsoring a day of fun filled activities on Oct. 4, for children aged 4 to 12 from 6 a.m. to 5 p.m at the Base Chapel. Costumes are welcome and kids must be ready to have fun. Lunch is provided. There will be many great activities for the children to enjoy:
