

SELFRIDGE

BY THE NUMBERS 2019

Overview

Selfridge Air National Guard Base is the most diverse and complex Air National Guard facility in the nation. More than 25 different military, Dept. of Homeland Security and affiliated organizations have personnel assigned to the base. Another 50-plus organizations utilize the space for training, equipment storage or access the specialized services available at the base.

The base is home to more than 4,200 personnel, representing a broad spectrum of capabilities available to the National Command Authority. Air and Army National Guard units on the base maintain the legacy begun by the Minutemen at the country's founding, with Citizen-Airmen and Citizen-Soldiers serving both state and nation.

The base is comprised of more than 250 buildings on approximately 3,500 acres and features a 5,000-foot main runway, capable of handling the full spectrum of today's military aircraft.

The host unit at Selfridge is the 127th Wing, a component of the Michigan Air National Guard. The 127th is also the largest unit on the base, comprised of more than 1,700 personnel. Brig. Gen. Rolf Mammen serves as both the 127th Wing commander and the base commander.

Selfridge opened as Selfridge Field in 1917 as a training base for pilots and aircraft mechanics during World War I. It was named for Army Lt. Thomas E. Selfridge, Jr., the first member of the U.S. military to pilot an aircraft and the world's first casualty of an aircraft crash, which happened when Selfridge was on a test flight with Orville Wright near Washington, D.C., in 1908.
